

Catharine KNIGHT 1812 – 1876

Catharine KNIGHT was born in St Winnow, Cornwall, in 1812, to parents William KNIGHT and Elizabeth LANGDON. Catharine married William BRAY in 1833. He was probably a miner, but died early, in 1844 aged just 39 years. As Catharine BRAY, she had six children under 11 years of age at that time, but 10 years later, still listed as a widow, she had made the bold decision to come to South Australia, arriving in 1854 on the ship 'Trafalgar'. What must her life have been like since William's death?

This is primarily the story of the BRAY family, but it must start with Catharine's family, the KNIGHT's. Catharine's mother Elizabeth LANGDON, also left an important legacy, when, in 1915, many of the MEINCKE family adopted LANGDON as the family surname, to avoid anti-German sentiment during WW1. Catharine's grandfather, William KNIGHT, is the earliest ancestor I can be sure about, and he was most likely born in Lanhydrock, Cornwall, in the 1750's. However, I cannot find a baptism record for this time. I did discover a marriage record from 1772, where he married Charity COLWELL in Lanhydrock. They had at least one child, William KNIGHT, born in 1778.

This William KNIGHT was Catharine's father, and he married Elizabeth LANGDON in 1808. They had five children, the second being Catharine. The various places listed show that the family lived close to, or in, St Austell, during this period. One of the places mentioned, Mount Charles, is notable because Anne and myself stayed there in a B&B in 2009, without realising the connection.

Catharine married William BRAY in 1833, at St Austell. The region is notable for its China Clay pits, the fine clay being exported world-wide. It is probable that this was William's mining career, and the fine dust being a contributor to his early death. They had six children, five living to adulthood and travelling to Australia.

Catharine and her five surviving children left Plymouth, Devon, in March 1854, and arrived at Port Adelaide in June 1854. Her eldest daughter, Maria, had married William HAWKE, and they were on the ship to provide support. Sadly, William and Maria's first child died during the trip. They did go on to have another twelve children born in Adelaide though. Catharine's second child was Phillipa, born in 1835, so arrived in Adelaide as a 19 year old.

Five years later, in 1859, Phillipa married Franz MEINCKE, and went to live with Franz in Kapunda. All five of Catharine's children lived long lives, and there are more than 600 descendants around Australia. Catharine died in Uraidla in 1876, of heart failure and dropsy. This is one of the better known and researched families, due to work done by myself and several other researchers in recent decades. We have previously described the MEINCKE family, including through their surname change to LANGDON, and the story continues there.

Catharine is Anne's great great great grandmother.
